Second Term Exam

Official education systems in Algeria were begun by the French colonialism who forced Algerian children to learn European languages that their own children were familiar with. Schools were not widespread and only a small minority was able to receive this education; however, things change dramatically when Algeria gained independence. Schooling systems underwent a major reform and more schools were built and made accessible to the general population. As is the case with any developing nation, there is always room for improvement and relevant authorities continue to focus on developing education in Algeria.

Alwatan, Hamid chaaban 1986 CTR.
